Which is spirituality, I understand, but as I said: spirituality means looking for a deeper meaning, which is not possible when it comes to Islam. Islam is the deeper meaning. There is no deeper meaning of a deeper meaning. There's just Islam and what's in it. Absolutely. True. Dude, these guys use Gaza to get followers. They're obviously fuckwads. With 0 respect, they love to wave the Palestinian flag and post it on their Instagram. Has one of them actually done anything to help? Literally anything, like donate 3 dollars? What the fuck is Carleton gonna do about Palestine anyways? They like to convince themselves that what they're doing matters. They don't give a fuck about Palestine. They just want to make themselves feel like heroes, or part of some movement. They're literally just going through a rebellious phase and latched onto something. If it wasn't Palestine, it would be climate change or Russia and Ukraine. And when I joined the Discord, they had it split by gender — boys and girls — which is illegal and really bothered me as a non-binary Muslim student. You did a very good write-up. They probably banned me with the justification that I said I'm not Muslim. I'm going to get them to admit that, because that's further discrimination. It may sound stupid because it's MSA, obviously for Muslims, but if I'm interested in the Qur'an, they cannot segregate based on religion. That isn't only against university policy — that's illegal in Canada. Generally, private clubs are not allowed to segregate based on race or religion because of federal and state anti-discrimination laws, though there are exceptions and complex legal distinctions. The key is the distinction between a truly private club and a business that is open to the public, which falls under public accommodation laws and cannot discriminate. However, the level of privacy, the club's purpose, and whether it receives tax benefits can impact the legality of membership policies, especially if a club is considered a public accommodation. This is a public club for students at a university, and it does receive a tax benefit. They're fucked, bro.
